Career Connections to Federal Internships & Fellowships

Meagan Roberts

Meagan Roberts, originally from Antioch, Tennessee, is a Ph.D. candidate in Health Law, Policy and Management, at Meharry Medical College; researching the knowledge and skills needed to delve deeper into the root causes of health outcomes among population groups in the United States. She has an extensive background and experiences in public health, health, scientific research and in nuclear security. She's a former ORISE intern from the Minority Serving Institutions Internship Program (MSIPP) through NNSA, from which she's served in NNSA's Office of Nuclear Incident Policy and Cooperation (NIPC). At the conclusion of her summer appointment, she extended and continued to work in NIPC through DOE Scholars, until she applied and was accepted into the 2025-2026 cohort of NNSA's Graduate Fellowship Program (NGFP). In that program through the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory, she serves within the Office of Strategic Partnerships and Engagements in the Office of Policy and Strategic Planning.
